In this tutorial, you'll learn how to use In this video we discuss how a CFO evaluates operating cash flow versus In this video, I discuss how CFOs analyze EBIT vs. EBITDA. The difference between EBIT and EBITDA is that EBIT includes depreciation and amortization expenses, while EBITDA does not. This means that EBIT is a more conservative measure of earnings than EBITDA. However, EBITDA can be useful for comparing companies across different industries or countries where accounting standards may vary. It's important to understand the limitations of both metrics and use them in conjunction with other financial statements to get a complete picture of a company's performance.
